

Vaccines, Transitions, Feelings, TAGs and Class Size!

Oh yeeeeeah, you made it to half-term! After a melee of masks, social distancing, assessments and trying to keep it all together in a pandemic - it's finally time for a break, and a bit of sunshine!

1. We so tired!

By the end of Friday the big word on your lips was that you were TIRED. And it didn't really matter what job you were in. EVERYONE was tired! That said, heads were marginally more positive, and marginally less tired, than classroom teachers - which is a bit of a role reversal on the previous 12 months.

Thinking about how you've been feeling today, which word best describes that feeling?

Question answered by 6,471 teachers on 28/05/2021 (results weighted to reflect national teacher and school demographics)

One of the problems of life is that you don't have much an overview while you're living through. (We didn't make that genius sentence up; John Irving did). Looking back over the past half-term, however, one of the phrases you've chosen - after hard work and tiring - is manic. Annoyingly, we don't have anything to compare this to because it's a new question. But it's one we will repeat as things get back to normal (fingers crossed) and we'll see if manicness is an inherent property of schools, or just a pandemic!

Thinking back over the last half term, which words would you use to describe your job?

Question answered by 6,236 teachers on 29/05/2021 (results weighted to reflect national teacher and school demographics)

2. Transition time!

It's that time of your when schools have to think about their new intakes. This year, around half of schools are doing an induction day for reception children and it will be in-person. 3% have already said it will be online. Can such young children really grasp an online induction?!

Around a third of you (36%) still don't know what it will be. Time is ticking, folks!

Are your new children (e.g. reception) doing school induction days before the new academic year?

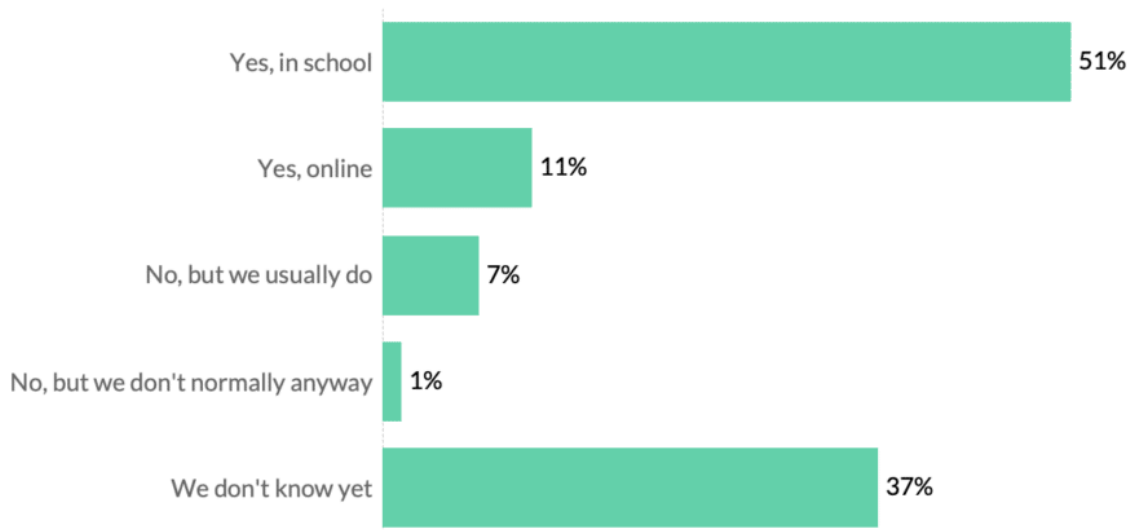

Question answered by 1,203 teachers on 24/05/2021 (results weighted to reflect national teacher and school demographics)

Over in secondary school it's a similar pattern... around half of schools will have Year 6 in for their usual transition induction days. Around a third (37%) don't know yet, and 11% are doing an online induction. 11-year-olds are possibly savvier at the tech, but it may well mean they're more scared when turning up in September - so worth planning more induction activities once they arrive if you're taking this route.

Are your Y6 students doing secondary school induction days this year before the new academic year?

Question answered by 1,161 teachers on 24/05/2021 (results weighted to reflect national teacher and school demographics)

3. What about the prom crowd?

At the end of the line, there's the Year 11s and 13s who are about to be unleashed into the wider world. We considered what provisions were made for school leavers after their assessments are over.

NOTE: A BIG CAVEAT - affluent schools are more likely to have a sixth form, hence that's why they're more likely to be running induction classes or running online classes to prepare for next year.

However, it's interesting to see how much more career support is being reported in schools with more deprived intakes. Big question remaining: what is the something else that the private schools are doing?! Answers on a postcard (or social media) for that one, please!

What provisions have you made for your school leavers (e.g. Y11 and Y13) after their assessments are over?

Question answered by 4,074 teachers on 24/05/2021 (results weighted to reflect national teacher and school demographics)

4. All of the marking, all of the time!

Comedian David Mitchell does a sketch in which he plays a sports commentator who raves about "All of the sport, all of the time". For many teachers, this term has been like that. But instead of sport, it's marking.

In primary school the focus has been on working out whether or not children have missed out on critical learning. While secondary teachers have been drowning under the responsibility of giving each exam year pupil a teacher assessed grade. Luckily, there appears to be light at the end of the tunnel!

Around half of teachers have no marking to do over the half-term break. As always, English teachers have the highest load, although Arts & Tech teachers are coming in a close second.

Do you have any marking to take home with you over half term break?

Question answered by 6,102 teachers on 28/05/2021 (results weighted to reflect national teacher and school demographics)

In part the marking load is being driven by TAGs... and it looks like this explains the Art teachers! While most teachers are all finished marking (woo!) arts and tech teachers seem to be struggling, with 9% admitting they've barely started. A problem with art is that it's not something that can easily be chopped back to a shorter exam with less content! Hence, students have been crafting over the term and now there's a mammoth load to go through. Leaders: worth checking in on your Arts departments to check they're okay!

Have you completed the marking needed to decide the Teacher Assessed Grades?

Question answered by 3,831 teachers on 28/05/2021 (results weighted to reflect national teacher and school demographics)

5. Good news! Over 30s are nearly vaccinated too!

If marking has been depressing... here's the good stuff!

81% of teachers over the age of 30 are now vaccinated, as are half of those in their 20s.

Given the speed of jabs, there's a good chance almost every age group is boshing the vaccines by the time term starts again. Well done. Made us quite emotional to see this one! ■■

Have you received a COVID-19 vaccination?

6. Does size matter?

Finally, if you've ever been told off by people in private schools when you've said they have smaller classes on average - here's some data! Most teachers in fee-paying school have an average class size of under 19 pupils. For most teachers in the state sector, they have an average class size of at least 25. Boom!
